BOWSER OUT RIDING.

TAKES HORSEBACK EXERCISE TO CURE HIS MANY AILMENTS.

But Finds, as Was to Be Expected, That the Care Gives Him More Trouble Than the Ills of Which He Had Complained.

[Copyright, 1900, by C. B. Lewis.]

Mrs. Bowser stood looking out of the window the other evening as Mr. Bowser came home from the office. There was a strange man with him, and they were in earnest conversation. He had a half gaily look on his face as he opened the door, and he seemed to want to be questioned, but the mystery

HE HELPED MR. BOWSER UP, was left unsolved until after dinner. Then she quietly asked:

"Well, what have you been buying this time?"

"Nothing at all," he replied.

"Then you've got some scheme on foot."

"There's no scheme about it. I have simply decided to do what any sensible man ought to do. When a man finds that he is the victim of a dozen ailments, he ought to go at it and cure himself, oughtn't he?"

"Of course, but what are your ailments?"

"I don't know," he said, "but I feel as if I ought to try something."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean, I feel as if I ought to try something."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean, I feel as if I ought to try something."

push him up a bit. When he starts to loose, you'll think you are in a rockin cheer."

Mr. Bowser doubted it, but, looking over the back fence, he made out Mrs.

Bowser standing at one of the rear windows. She had referred to

"bounce" and "joggle," and he felt that he was being teased. He drew a long breath, uttered a silent prayer and chipped to the horse to strike into a lope. The horse obeyed. Had the rider caught the motion it would have been plain sailing, but he didn't catch

it. There were half a dozen bobs, three or four clutches at his mane, and Mr. Bowser rolled sideways out of the saddle and fell in a heap on a pile of ashes. It was a good boy and a sympathetic boy who had brought the horse around. He helped Mr. Bowser up, insisted that it was an accident that might have happened to the best rider on earth and in various ways encouraged him to try again. The fallen rider kicked at the ash heap and struck at the fence and was for giving it up, but the boy soothed him and made him understand that he would lose prestige if he failed to mount again.

"I intend to, of course," replied Mr.

Bowser in defiant tones as he noticed

Mrs. Bowser still at the window. "I don't claim to be much of a rider, but I'll get the hang of it in a minute. I think the horse stubbed his toe the other time. Look through that knot hole in the fence, will you, and tell me what you see in my back yard?"

"The kitchen girl is sitting on de ground and laugh herself to death," reported the lad after a look.

"She is, eh? Sent out by my wife to spy on me? Well, let her giggle. I'll stick on this time if I have to have my legs tied under the saddle."

"That's de way to talk. When you git into de saddle, jest move with de horse.

All ready now."

Mr. Bowser had another climbing match, but in due time he found himself filling the saddle again. Prudence warned him to go slow, but when he thought of Mrs. Bowser and the cook he determined to run at risks. As he got a brace for his feet he struck the horse with his heel, and the animal started away on an easy canter. It was the rocking chair motion the boy had referred to, but Mr. Bowser didn't catch it. He found himself bobbing about and his feet out of the stirrups, and before he knew what he was doing both heels struck the horse and set him off at full gallop. There was a yellow that could have been heard half a mile away, and then the rider clutched
